

Littoral 2017

Change, Naturalness and People

5th - 7th September, Liverpool Hope University

We are pleased to announce a three-day international conference and excursions exploring the anthropocene and the littoral. The conference will seek to examine how humans and human processes influence the littoral, and how these influences may now be viewed as natural, as much as any other natural processes.

The theme will gather all disciplines to explore current issues of relevance to the coast and will be of interest to a wide spectrum of scientists, including those from the physical sciences, climate change scientists and ecologists, social scientists, engineers, policy makers and advisers and practitioners. The official language of the conference will be English.

Key dates

- Friday 19th May 2017: Deadline for submitting sessions (with paper and author information, including abstracts), and paper or poster proposals for open sessions.
- Friday 2nd June 2017: Confirmation of acceptance of sessions for the conference programme.
- Early June 2017: Provisional programme published. The programme will be finalised in early July 2017.
- "Early bird" prices are available until 30th June 2017, by which date all those listed on the conference programme and attending (e.g. convenors, chairs, presenting authors) should be registered.

For more information, please visit the conference web site

<http://www.hope.ac.uk/news/conferences/littoral2017/>

Contact us by email: littoral2017@hope.ac.uk

Twitter: @Littoral_2017

Facebook: <https://www.facebook.com/Littoral-2017-572369719582006/>

We look forward to welcoming you to the fantastic city of Liverpool!

